Today in one of your stores I noticed paraphernalia--what was close enough to it, anyway, a plastic baggie (often used for cocaine I've learned through work over the years) at your Hildebran store in the men's room. I saw a needle in a bathroom years ago at The Waffle House--also on the sink. I reported it so some kid doesn't stick themselves--I see a lot of needles, actually, and usually bury them with my foot. It's a sign of the times for anyone in tune. Coincidentally, a manager was there as I left the Food Lion bathroom. Normally, I would have said nothing about it but you could now say I'm sick to death of the addicts, dealers and their friends in management--they are inescapable in manufacturing. Food Lion did the right thing, whatever it was, I soon left (after seeing if Cafe Caribe was on sale there at $2.88 like it used to be in Hickory but no longer is--Cafe Caribe increased its price joining the club of ridiculousness--the insanity that is life in the United States today--I was out that way to begin with hoping to avoid the $70 oil change I got in Hickory about a year ago). Anyway, at Wanzl/Technibilt my first week, people did what they did at Zenith Global, Kontane Logistics (which isn't far from Hildebran because I stopped there often for Food Lion's fat chicken wings) H.T. Hackney could have used some cleaning-up (someone was found passed-out with a needle in their arm on a toilet my second day) and at Wanzl, Orion Hale is dead at 23. I could be accused of having ethics issues myself for including him but he hasn't been the first body I know of connected to drugs and all the stupidity that goes with it--which includes the morgue from time to time--former co-worker Anthony Jaworsky remains MIA, Randy Claypoole got a bullet in the head with Brandon Whats-his-name-who-got-stabbed-to-death being two of my former neighbors. The neighbors I have now are about the same so have violent incidents like last Sunday morning. To blame is drugs and crazy people--that's all it takes. Orion Hale's Dad was Shannon Hale, Wanzl management who smelled like nothing but pot. That's because Shannon Hale smoked dope all day long at Wanzl where it was accepted but as Wanzl knows, there were accidents involving Shannon Hale who ran a forklift into a pole. I would be run into later--if Wanzl is good at anything, it's not manufacturing, but it does specialize in cover-ups. Other incidents involving people on the sauce Wanzl is also entirely aware of because management is usually somewhere like it was today at Food Lion. But unlike Wanzl/Technibilt, Food Lion did something about it--its approach was the opposite of Wanzl's executives.

At Wanzl, the day I had enough of the corner store crew in Plant 3--that was so flooded with pot I called it "Sunny Valley Apartments"--I told Greg Eller in his building the amount people were putting away in Plant 3 and that I wasn't doing any work, anyway--because of the amount people were putting away in front of Wanzl management, I did a lot of standing around, too. Wanzl's social media campaign says the otherwise of how it operates making who owns the internet, too, little more than a drawn-out lie. I was also offered a Xanax for five dollars by Scott Deese my first week as James McGill kept his bowl warm if not usually hot--lacking connections, Deese was doomed to work the assembly line. McGill never did because he knew someone--that also clearly applied to others who are probably still there today. If you knew all the right people at Wanzl--Jose "Motormouth" Campos for example--you could put away as much dope or booze as you pleased and if you flipped your lid on whatever you were on Wanzl would save you. Wanzl Health Safety Environment Coordinator Blake Guffey was never seen or heard of when I was at Wanzl--don't hire him to clean-up your store because he won't. I believe Guffey was never at Wanzl in Newton--that's probably why I never saw Wanzl's Health Safety Environment Coordinator but I did see the powers-that-be making sure we were "working." Wanzl did a fine job of bullshitting the NCDOL and now Catawba County that all is well when all is well for the executives but not well for the people who work there. After quitting Wanzl's bullshit, I got a bad report from ProBimbos in Conover and Wanzl, too. My first assignment with Proldiots was at Kontane Logistics which also sent someone packing once it was discovered someone couldn't work because they were wasted; like at Food Lion, I turned someone in at Kontane, not because they were on something--a lot of people were on something, but because Caleb could barely function--like Food Lion probably will if they find one of their people is responsible for baggie-negligence, Greg Canter of Kontane Logistics sent Caleb on after what I told Canter (as far as I know: I never saw Caleb again). I learned about what those plastic baggies were about at Two Men and a Truck long ago--as I cleaned-out trucks I saw them often enough to figure them out.

It's good to see Food Lion hasn't joined Weedzl/Technibowl which has and will make more money off the media and government it's been lying to for years thanks aw
